Mint Julep

This unknown cocktail is considered by most of the bartenders as the first cocktail in the world! The first written evidence about this ancestor of the Mojito can be traced back to the 1800's. However, the consumption of this cocktail is much more older, dating back, according to Fernando Castellon to the ancient Eastern times.

At that time, we don't refer to the refreshing drink as a cocktail, but as a «tonic drink» with a medicinal function.

The word is a derivative from the arabic julâb and persian gulâb, meaning «rose water» and referring to any sweet potion having a medicinal function. After thousands of linguistic distortions, ranging from «jelâb», «julepius» to «julapium», the cocktail found its final name of Mint Julep in Virginia.

Bloody Mary

For some people, the name of the cocktail comes from Queen Mary I of England (Mary Tudor, nicknamed «Bloody Mary»). Daughter of Henri VIII of England and well-known for her cruelty.

The name of the writer Ernest Hemingway is also associated with the cocktail. When drinking alcohol, he was always afraid to provoke his wife's anger, Mary Welsh, who's he called «Bloody Mary». The writer asked the barman Bertin, to create a cocktail «without any smell» in order to avoid some troubles with his wife.

Intense Passion

It's the essence of Reunion Island, its true nature which is represented in this cocktail.

The cocktail is made with passion fruit, which juice was called « Nectar of the gods » by ancient civilisation. As one of the most delicious fruits in the world, the passion fruit is associated with traditional rum from Reunion Island, an alcohol extracted from local sugar cane. We add a touch of lemon juice to make it more tonic.

Intensely tropical, the island fascinates... Intensely bewitching, the cocktail brings you to new heights !

Mojito

The origin of the Mojito is 100% cuban. Its entire history is based on the sugar cane and rum history. The legend says that, in the 19th century, pirates from the Drake vessel consumed sugar cane brandy made on the island of Cuba together with perfumed mint leaves. Since 1910, the lime juice would be added to the beverage, which gave it its name of mojito, literally «little mojo» (from the portuguese molho, meaning sauce). The «mojo» being a mixture made with lemon, used as a flavour enhancer.

In 1920, the mojito became a real emblem of cuban culture: the cocktail rose to the rank of «National cocktail of Cuba».
